"Safe House"...anything but! New Release from Tempe Video

Classic scream queens find themselves "Safe Inside" ...or do they?
Suspenseful original thriller creeps onto DVD, Blu-ray with titillating bonus features

June 19, 2017 - Akron, Ohio: Tempe Video today announced the release of the "something's-inside-the-house" suspenser Safe Inside, co-starring iconic scream queens Judith O'Dea (Night of the Living Dead) and Brinke Stevens (The Slumber Party Massacre). Following a limited summer theatrical release, Safe Inside will street on August 29, 2017, priced at $19.99 (DVD) and $29.99 (Blu-ray) SRP with bonus features on both versions.

One hot summer night, JJ Tyler thinks he's spending the night alone in his suicidal mother's home. He's wrong. With nods to favorite fright shows Poltergeist, The Strangers, and The Exorcism of Emily Rose, writer/director Jason Paul Collum (October Moon) has crafted a suspenseful mystery that finds JJ Tyler (Chris Harder, Extraordinary Measures) recovering from a nervous breakdown following his mother's suicide. JJ is left on his own for the first time when wife Alex (Darcey Vanderhoef) leaves town for the weekend. As night falls, he hears floors creak and walls moan - but is it anything more than an old house settling? Possibly...

Collum shot Safe Inside in his actual home, which holds the secrets to the film's mystery. Among Collum's previous releases are cable TV favorites Screaming in High Heels: The Rise & Fall of the Scream Queen Era and Something to Scream About, along with horror home video favorites October Moon and its sequel, October Moon 2: November Son. Also featuring Tina Ona Paukstelis (Aswang: The Unearthing), Karen Dilloo (5 Dark Souls), and Jerod Howard (TV's Boss), Safe Inside will receive comprehensive print and social media support, with retail MOD distribution through Allied Vaughn.

07/25/17 818522019376 Finding Kim DVD-5 2017 When Kim was younger, he never really felt comfortable in his own skin. Being assigned as female at birth and raised a girl, his childhood was full of bullying and traumatic experiences. The other kids would tease him mercilessly about looking and acting "like a boy," sometimes even preventing him from using the restrooms at school. Kim didn't have the words to describe what was happening or how he felt to anyone—he just knew he was different. Later on in life, he came to the realization that maybe he was gay, but the lesbian community didn't feel right to him either. After diving headfirst into all sorts of queer and transgender reading material, Kim came to the ultimate decision that he was meant to be a man, and began the female-to-male transformation process almost immediately. Kim's story is entwined with insightful interviews with members and activists in the LGBTQ community: Carmen Carrera ("RuPaul's Drag Race," season 3), Buck Angel (a famous female-to-male adult entertainer), Dr. Tony Mangubat (a surgeon specializing in transgender procedures), and Seattle's own Dan Savage. Finding Kim follows our titular character through his day-to-day life to his eventual life-changing surgery as he becomes who he always felt he was under the surface. Film Rarities directed by Cecil B. DeMille from Flicker Alley

GLORIA SWANSON IN
MALE AND FEMALE

LEATRICE JOY IN THE CLINGING VINE
with
THE AGE OF BALLYHOO

AV retailers, for your classic film section, from Flicker Alley comes two carefully master films from Cecil B. DeMille, rediscovered and certain to be in demand from film historians and collectors.

07/21/2017 818522019321 The Clinging Vine With The Age of Ballyhoo DVD-9 1926/1973 THE CLINGING VINE Cecil B. DeMilles 1926 production of The Clinging Vine is a recent rediscovery and perhaps the ultimate 20s gender-bender. Leatrice Joy plays The Presidents Assistant - known as A.B. - who hired, wired and fired men - but had never kissed one. Based on the 1922 Broadway musical by Zelda Sears, the movie mocks male stereotypes of women while playfully exploring ideas of gender and romantic love in relation to female professionalism. When expert businesswoman A.B. dutifully fires Jimmie Bancroft (Tom Moore), her employers impractical grandson, Jimmie calls her a flat-chested dried prune and refuses to beg for his job back. Insulted, A.B. takes it upon herself to undergo an amazing but comedic transformation into a coy, clinging vine draped in flowing dresses. It is only after she adopts this ultra-feminine disguise that she is able to win Jimmies heart, and help him turn his massive eggbeater invention into a successful business venture. Though Sears original stage musical won over audiences with its boisterous feminist undertones, it is Leatrice Joy, with her masculine bob haircut and performative energy, who brings a radical flare to DeMilles otherwise standard film adaptation. Through Joy, the movie ends up treating gender as a type of charade, with masculinity undercutting femininity and vice versa. This is perfectly illustrated when Jimmie tells the feminine A.B. that shes wonderful, and A.B, following the advice of his old-fashioned grandma, bats her eyelashes and says, Oh, do go on! The Clinging Vine is digitally mastered from a 35mm master positive taken from the original camera negative. The digitally recorded score incorporates elements of the 1922 stage musical on which this movie is based. It is compiled and performed by Frederick Hodges, classically trained master of the syncopated piano, who has appeared around the world on stage, television and radio, and has made numerous solo and band recordings. Film historian Heather Addison, an assistant professor at Western Michigan University, has written and recorded an optional second-track commentary, which illuminates The Clinging Vine in the context of its time. The Age of Ballyhoo (1973) Gloria Swanson, legendary star of the silent screen, narrates The Age of Ballyhoo, which is enriched with her own colorful memories, film clips and photographs. Winner of two film festival Gold Medals, two Silver Medals, and three Emmys- from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, this 1973 documentary is directed by the late David Shepard and assembled from rare, authentic souvenirs of the period: songs, graphics, newsreels and movies. Among them are scenes of Swanson in Manhandled and The Love of Sunya, the sound newsreel of Lindberghs take-off for Paris, and sound footage of the original 1927 production of Show Boat and of blues legend Bessie Smith! The Age of Ballyhoo is digitally mastered from the original film negative. Leatrice Joy; Tom Moore; Robert Edeson; Snitz Edwards; Toby Claude; Dell Henderson Adapted by Jack Jevne and Rex Taylor from the play by Zelda Sears

07/21/2017 818522019338 Male and Female DVD-5 1919 MALE AND FEMALE
Evincing Cecil B. DeMilles unequalled flair for glamorized decadence and wry social comment, Male and Female is a tongue-in-cheek morality play that playfully examines the codes of conduct of class-conscious Britain when the film was made in 1919. In the role that made her a star, Gloria Swanson stars as Lady Mary Lasenby, complacent in her status and happy when being pampered by handmaids in her luxurious boudoir and bath. Less certain that merit and social rank are equivalent is the admirable Crichton (Thomas Meighan), a selfless butler who serves Mary and her spoiled clan. When the vacationing swells and their hired help are shipwrecked on the shores of a desert island, the follies of class are displaced by matters of survival; Mary and Crichton are mutually attracted and the resourceful servant is soon king. To this already bubbly mix, DeMille adds a lavish Babylonian flashback for no discernible reason except to show a gorgeously plumed and gowned Swanson descending into a den of lions. This sequence pushes an already outrageous film into a stratosphere of visual excess, assuring its place among the glittering landmarks of silent film history. While D.W. Griffiths contribution to the development of film technique has been widely recognized, Cecil B. DeMilles equally influential career has been largely ignored by film historians. DeMilles critical reputation is based almost entirely on The Cheat (Lasky-Paramount, 1915) and its early acceptance by French film critics. Among his contemporaries, however, Cecil B. DeMille was widely recognized as a major talent, and other filmmakers were quick to emulate his methods in their own work. DeMille came from a theatrical family. His father, Henry C. DeMille, was a writer best known for his collaborations with impresario David Belasco, the wizard of Broadway. Cecils brother, William C. DeMille, was also a leading Broadway playwright. In his early career Cecil worked as an actor, play broker and theatrical manager. He also collaborated with David Belasco on The Return of Peter Grimm, but his success in the theater was limited. In 1911 Cecil teamed with producer Jesse L. Lasky to write a series of musical playlets for the vaudeville stage, and this association led to a lasting friendship. When Lasky decided to try his hand at the movies in 1913, he enlisted Cecil as Director General of the newly organized Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Their first picture, The Squaw Man (1914), was a hit, and DeMille boosted his reputation as a filmmaker with screen adaptations of Belasco-produced plays like The Rose of the Rancho (1914) and The Girl of the Golden West (1914). In association with art director Wilfred Buckland, cinematographer Alvin Wyckoff and his brother William, Cecil B. DeMille brought a new sophistication to films by insisting on solid narrative technique, more realistic settings, and the use of lighting effects to enhance dramatic mood. By 1915, DeMille had developed a polished style, and his films were considered the best the movies had to offer. Based on the play The Admirable Crichton by Sir James M. Barrie
